1. What cookies are

Cookies are small text files stored on your device. They help a website function and can also be used for analytics and other purposes.

2. Consent

Non-essential cookies are disabled until you give consent via the cookie banner. You can refuse non-essential cookies and still use the site.

Withdrawal: you can withdraw consent at any time by changing your cookie choices in the site controls if available, or by deleting cookies in your browser.

3. Cookie categories used

- Strictly necessary: needed for core site functions and security.
- Preferences: remember choices such as language.
- Analytics (optional): measure site usage to improve content.
- Marketing (optional): used only with explicit consent.

4. Cookie inventory table

This table lists the cookie categories BanskoLab may use. The exact cookies present depend on enabled services. The live site cookie list should be reviewed and updated whenever services change.

Cookie / item	Category	Purpose	Typical duration
session_id (example)	Strictly necessary	Maintain session state and protect forms where applicable	Session

lang (example)	Preferences	Remember language preference	Up to 12 months
analytics (service-dependent)	Analytics	Understand page usage and improve site content	Up to 24 months
marketing (service-dependent)	Marketing	Measure campaign performance or targeting if enabled	Varies

5. Consent records

Where a consent tool is used, the site should record whether consent was given, for which categories, and when. Consent records should not store more personal data than necessary.
